

Switching to OCR from Eduqas

Introduction

We've developed a specification designed to motivate and enthuse learners at GCSE level, giving them opportunities to develop key English skills through their exploration of and engagement with a range of literature, from Shakespeare through to the 21st century. So why choose OCR's English Literature?

- Our GCSE (9-1) English Literature specification is designed to encourage learners to engage critically with and explore a variety of texts across the major genres. The emphasis is on building learners' confidence in developing and articulating a fresh, individual response to texts that is supported and justified.
- Unique to OCR, a fresh and innovative approach to comparing texts in the linear exams (a requirement for all GCSE (9-1) English Literature courses: in Paper 1 candidates compare an extract from their studied text (modern prose or drama) with an unseen extract linked by theme and genre; in Paper 2 candidates compare a studied and an unseen poem on the same theme, meaning candidates are never asked to respond to an unseen text without a studied text for support.
- Clear, well balanced exam papers that mirror each other in terms of format and weighting, with modern and literary heritage texts assessed in each paper.
- Fresh new set text choices recommended by teachers alongside more familiar texts drawn from our literary and cultural heritage.
- You can register for free for OCR's digital poetry anthology, packed with practical activities and ideas to support your teaching of all of the poems in OCR's set poetry anthology Towards a World Unknown, regardless of which themed cluster you choose.
- We provide a range of creative, well researched resources to cover every aspect of the course, from candidate exemplars to specific skills development to handy revision and reference guides.

How do I find out more?

Key differences

OCR English Literature	Eduqas English Literature
Balanced, straightforward assessment with two exam papers equally weighted at 50% , both 2 hours.	One exam paper worth 40% , 2 hours; one exam paper worth 60% , 2 hours 30 minutes.
The structure of the exams is very similar in both papers . Both exam papers are the same length, format and weighting. This means you can focus on teaching your learners about the texts, without spending time teaching them to navigate complex assessments.	The structure of the exams differs across Paper 1 and Paper 2. Paper 2 is a longer exam, and in this exam, candidates answer on a modern prose or drama text, a 19 th century novel and two questions on unseen poetry, including a comparison question.
19 th century novel: A choice of two questions , one extract based and one a discursive essay.  For Shakespeare: A choice of two questions , one extract based and one a discursive essay.	19 th century novel: One essay question focussing on a printed extract and the whole text.  For Shakespeare: One question with two parts , one focussing on a printed extract and the other part a separate discursive question on the whole text.
Unique to OCR, a fresh and personal approach to comparing texts – comparison of a set text extract with a same genre, thematically linked unseen extract in both papers (Paper 1 – modern text; Paper 2 – poetry). <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The studied text provides a springboard for learners to make connections and comparisons with the unseen text.</li> </ul>	Two comparison questions both focusing on poetry . In Paper 1 a question based on the Eduqas anthology (one poem printed in the exam for comparison with another one from memory); in Paper 2 a comparison question focussing on two unseen poems.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Learners have reported that they feel 'more confident' about tackling an unseen text when they can link it to a familiar taught text.</li> </ul>
The comparison question in each exam paper is always based on texts printed in the paper (Paper 1 - modern text; Paper 2 – poetry).	Paper 1 comparison question on the Eduqas anthology poems requires learners to compare a printed poem with another one from memory.
Choice of three themed poetry clusters in the OCR poetry anthology (study one cluster – 15 poems).	One collection of 18 set poems in the Eduqas poetry anthology.

Content

The key content and skills to be covered by all new GCSE (9-1) English Literature specifications mean it's simple and straightforward to move to a different exam board, even if you're halfway through a course. There is crossover of many of the set text choices between exam boards, another key factor in considering a potential move.
